

Jeffrey Engel presents

William Henry Fry Santa Claus Symphony

William Henry Fry was an important figure in American history (or at least he thought so!). He was the first native born American to write large scale orchestral works, the first to write a grand opera and have it performed, the first music critic of a major American newspaper and the only composer of a Santa Claus symphony. Despite such achievements he remains one of America's least remembered musicians.

A fair fate?
Come, listen and decide for yourself.
